ANy Person of Quality, or others desirous to have their Children taught to Read Latin being altogether ignorant of their Mother Tongue, and being six years old, may be taught in James Porterfield's School, a little above the Weigh-house, on the North of the High Street: in eight or nine Months time, providing they be of ordinary Capacity: Also these of my own Scholars, having the true English pronounciation may be forthwith taught in six Weeks, or two Months at most, to read Latin, without any Hesitation.

To the Right Honourable,

ADAM BROWN Esquire, Lord Provoſt of Edinburgh,

WILLIAM HUTCHESON,
ARCHIBALD COKBURN,
JOHN HAY,
THOMAS DUNDASS, } Bailies.
JOHN DUNCAN, Dean of Guild,
WILLIAM DUNDASS, Theaſaurer,
WILLIAM LIVINGSTONE, Deacon Conviener,

And the reſt of the Honourable Members of the Council of the City Edinburgh,

Very Honourable,

UNiverſal Experience in the daily Tranſaction of Humane Affairs, hath put it beyond Debate, That Learning and Knowledge are both the greateſt Glory, and the Brighteſt Ornament of Man-kind; by which Grandour, Honour, Wealth and Preferment, have been attained and poſſeſſed. It is this which hath preſerv'd the Names of our deceas'd Anceſtors, and made for them perpetual Regiſters, and laſting monuments.

Its uſe is general and diffuſive, being neceſſary for all Imployments, and all Perſons, without which the pureſt Blood in the Nobleſt Veins, contracts ſuch a ſordid Earthlineſs, that Honour becomes a Misfortune, and Greatneſs contemptible.

And tho' this Attempt of mine be converſant about bout the lowest Rudiments of Learning; yet no Wise-man will misconstruct it, who understands that no g dly Fabrick can be rear'd, where the Basis is found defective.

The Foundation of reading of English, in past Ages, was held in so great esteem and reverence, that there have been Dedications thereof to several of the Kings of England, and of later days to K. James the VI. by one Evans.

And seing it is not purchased, but by gradual Steps, nor can be gained but by suitable Instructers, it is indispensably necessar for publick Teachers as I am to give account of our Selves, and Methods of teaching, to our Superiours and Patrons; And to this I inclin'd the rather, because it is now my Honour, as well as my good Fortune, to instruct your Children, I have presum'd to give the World next unto your Honours the Way and Method of my instructions, which I prostrate at Your Feet to be preserv'd; and if the Essay shall meet your favorable Protection, it will (beyond all Considerations) give me Courage and Vigour to Prosecute the design to its issue, and all under the Title of Your English School-Master. And may it please,

Right Honourable,
Your Honours
Most Humble Servant,
James Porterfield.

WE the Primar, and Professors of the Colledge of Edinburgh, having perused and considered a Book, entituled, Edinburgh's English School-master; whereof James Porterfield is Author and Teacher; and having made Experiment thereof, by hearing his Scholars read: do find that the Rules and Methods therein, are Expedite, Regular, and agreeing to Art; and that Children do learn to read better, and in shorter time by this, than by the common way of Teaching: We also having observed, that many through want of due Instruction in this beginning of their Breeding, prove defective all their Life, in Reading and Writing their Native Language truly and distinctly, and that this Blot doth cleave to, otherwise learn'd Men, from the Ignorance, or Unskilfulness of their first Teachers. We approve the said Book, and judge it very necessary and profitable for the grounding and true Educating of Children, or other unlearned Persons in spelling and reading English or Latin. On this Account, We give unto him Our Testimony, and declare Our Satisfaction with his

WE the Masters of the Colledge of Glasgow, knowing that James Porterfield did for many Years teach Children in this City, with great Approbation and Success, by laying down in a new Way, solid Grounds for Reading, and distinct dividing of Words, by Syllables, which is of no small Use. Do therefore Recommend this his Book, as usefull for that End. Subscrib'd at Glasgow, September the Third, 1695.
